Keep in mind the following

The scholarships vary in size. Some are modest; others are substantial. Please check universities' websites and contact university officials for more detailed information about a particular scholarship.

The IB diploma is recognized by universities worldwide. These universities, including those that do not offer scholarships for IB students, often look favourably on applications from IB graduates. They may offer other types of scholarships for which IB graduates are encouraged to apply.

In many cases, universities with low tuition fees do not offer scholarships of any type because financial assistance is unnecessary. However, they may recognize the IB diploma and even be particularly interested in IB students.

The list is not exhaustive and is regularly revised as new information is received from universities.

The IB does not in any way endorse the universities listed.

Additional "IB-Friendly" Universities Source: IB Workshop in Portland, OR—November 2011

These colleges and universities do not yet have any IB-specific scholarships, but they understand the IB, highly value it, and encourage applications from IB Diploma students.
